

CARE.AALAS.ORG

The AALAS Foundation is proud to officially announce its recently created website – www.care.aalas.org.

This site was designed to support our BOLD efforts to help educate the public about the incredibly caring professionals working in the field of laboratory animal science. It hosts a growing collection of video interviews of people working in the field of LAS and stories of survivors who have benefited greatly, thanks to biomedical research. It also contains useful information for anyone interested in a career in this tremendously rewarding field.

If you've not done so already, check out this new site and share it with your friends and family who may not be aware or fully understand that, every day, across the world, there are dedicated and compassionate people working hard to ensure that all animals working in research receive the care, respect and honor they deserve, in gratitude for the millions of humans and animals who benefit from their work.

If you have any questions or comments about the site please contact either myself or Vicki Campbell, Foundation Administrator (Vicki.campbell@aalas.org).

Regards,

Dave
